British rocker Sting is asking $56 million for his two-story penthouse at Manhattan's 15 Central Park West, according to the Corcoran Group, which has the listing with Sotheby's International Realty.

Measuring about 5,400 square feet, the four-bedroom condo is on the 16th and 17th floors and overlooks Central Park, according to a Corcoran spokesperson. The master suite has two dressing rooms and two bathrooms; in one of them, the park is visible from the bathtub. The all-white kitchen has two refrigerators, four ovens and three dishwashers. French doors lead out to a roughly 400-square-foot terrace, which has heaters and a canopy to make it usable year-round.

Sting's wife Trudie Styler said in an emailed statement that the couple were among the early buyers at the Robert A.M. Stern Architects-designed condominium; they purchased their unit for $26.98 million from the developer in 2008, according to public records. They hired architecture and interior design firm SheltonMindel to build out the space, Corcoran said. Lee F. Mindel, the firm's principal, said he added two custom spiral staircases and designed a spiral-shaped, double-sided gas fireplace for the living room.

"We were lucky enough to be able to create a unique home for our family," Ms. Styler said in an emailed statement. Corcoran said the couple is selling because they need more space to accommodate their growing family. Sting, 65, has six children, four of them with Ms. Styler, and a number of grandchildren.
